He was a respected general law practitioner in Fort Lauderdale, Florida for 49 years. He took deep pride in helping his clients, and treasured the hundreds of letters he received over the years. He was a true gentleman and embodiment of the "last great generation." He never turned his back on a client, even when they were unable to compensate him, his heart was just that big.

He was a born teacher, but never stopped learning. He had an insatiable thirst for knowledge, and could hold an intelligent conversation with anyone about anything. He loved Buckeye football, studying history and religion, debating politics, reading about UFOS, guiding Taylor through her law studies and watching old Westerns. He maintained close ties with friends of over 50 years and cherished his close bond with his six brothers and sisters.

Frank lived life his way, with a sense of humor, integrity, positivity, down to earth toughness and unwavering faith in God. This was his legacy.

Though he became a Floridian, he loved his PA roots, particularly King of Prussia and Valley Forge.
